YE TALE OF AN AMERICAN JEWISH CONGRESS

The American Jewish Congress is still with us. Last week it held a session at Atlantic City, marking the tenth anniversary of its establishment. It gave evidence of possessing sufficient vitality to last indefinitely. Besides, is it not favored with the services of our good friend Mr. Bernard G. Richards? So long as the congress has a little room somewhere that it can call its own, and a desk and typewriter with the indefatigable Bernard G. in control of its destiny, its existence is assured.

The American Jewish Congress came into being ten years ago in a blaze of glory and enthusiasm. It represented two ideas which at that time held a fascination for the Jewish public. It embodied, first, the idea of comprehensive organization of Jewish life, and secondly, the employment of the most approved democratic methods in effecting the organization. The conditions surrounding the war had made both these ideas popular. To cope with war needs, Jewish life as in the case of other peoples, had been mobilized and organized as never before. Moreover all the talk about the war being a struggle between democracy and autocracy had given currency to the term "democracy" and paved the way for its ready acceptance everywhere.

Well, the first American Jewish Congress, was a tremendous success. In providing for its further existence two factors had to be taken into account. The first was the personnel of its leadership. The second was the relationship it was to bear towards existing institutions which were already dealing with important Jewish needs. In the matter of leadership the congress was rather fortunate. Dr. Stephen Wise as president brought to it prestige and ability. Bernard G. Richards as secretary was persevering, intelligent and likeable. The leadership on the whole was satisfactory.

In dealing with concrete situations the Congress found itself on the one hand trenching on the field of the Zionists, and on the other treading on the vested interests of the American Jewish Committee and its constituent institutions. With the Zionists the Congress readily reached an understanding. The two organizations soon became fast friends and were visiting each other so frequently that one could hardly tell which was the home of which. The American Jewish Committee however was in no mood to dally with the new upstart and open anti-Zionism then developed.

This year the Congress reached a crisis. The Zionists had entered into an alliance with the American Jewish Committee group, whereby the president, in the Jewish Agency deal. This meant that the Congress was to be broken. The Congress found itself used by the Zionists and at the same time facing a determined opposition from the American Jewish Committee. And at the head of it stood Stephen Wise, a supporter of the Agency scheme, in disfavor with the Zionists and with Louis Marshall, owner of the Committee.

We are now reaching the climax of the thrilling tale of Jewish inter-Zionist and inter-organizational affairs.

The Congress met, Stephen Wise retired from the presidency. He may have shed tears, but his countenance is now dry. It passed a resolution favoring the Jewish Agency. The resolution was supported somewhat

MY FRIEND, JEROME J. LOUCHEIM AND THE KEREN HAYESOD

Rabbi I. M. Isserman

Jerome J. Loucheim of Philadelphia is a very dear friend of mine. He is a member of one of the finest Jewish families of the traditional type. He is a leader in Jewish affairs, but never aggressive. A successful business, he gave generously and [illegible] Federation of Jewish Philanthropies [illegible] One Hundred Thousand Dollars. To the building fund of the [illegible] Fifty Thousand Dollars. In addition to [illegible] gave to the cause in memory of his parents [illegible] him more than One Hundred Thousand Dollars. He is [illegible] that he refused to have a public celebration of [illegible] fundraising, the money has not been collected. Jerome J. Loucheim also attended synagogue services, because he loves to worship.

He was interested in establishing a Jewish city in Zion. About a few years ago I approached him for a contribution to the Jewish National Fund, he gave me fifty dollars without hesitation. I knew that he was interested in the cause for he was a subscriber to Zionist [illegible] gentleman's name appearing in connection with the Zionist movement in Philadelphia, and it is [illegible] to give the impression that [illegible] Zionist sympathizer. In the course of our conversation we [illegible] Jewish, whose names were prominently associated with the cause of the Keren Hayesod. Louis Freedman, [illegible] Louis Albert [illegible] and other [illegible] non-Zionists.

This [illegible] attitude on the part of Mr. Loucheim and some of his friends seems most [illegible] and encouraging. When the Jewish Agency was [illegible] a number of [illegible] Felix Warburg would be one of the most [illegible] being. I was shocked. Antagonism in Philadelphia, some of the [illegible] anti-Zionist have some ground for saying that the cause is hopeless as the establishment of Palestine. Do you remember the old fashioned days when the week's laundry was pegged out on long lines or stretched on clean grass where it dried in the healthful bright sunshine. "Didn't the clothes just seem to have freshness and brightness washed right into them." That is what the South Shore Laundry Limited does for your clothes. Situated at St. Lambert, just a few steps after one has crossed Victoria Bridge, it is just at the brink of the St. Lawrence and surrounded by lovely trees, an ideal place for a laundry. Phone Marquette 7946 or St. Lambert 241 and the service of the South Shore Laundry Limited is at your disposal. For in addition to knowing that your clothes are being laundered in a high ly efficient, beautifully located plant, you will also find that they are returned to you promptly.

Mr. G. Ross Marshall, President of the South Shore Laundry Limited, is also President of the Eastern Canada Laundry Owners Association. So proud is Mr. Marshall of the South Shore Laundry Limited that he extends a hearty welcome to all visitors. Thousands of ladies have been shown through the entire plant and marvelled at its high state of efficiency. The South Shore Laundry Limited is giving the sum of $25.00 to any organization of which one hundred members visit this laundry. To arrange such a visit and night seeing tour a member of the organization has but to phone for an appointment. During the week of May 19th, films of how work is done at the South Shore Laundry are being shown at the Imperial Theatre. Whether you are an experienced housekeeper a new bride or the head of the family whose family has gone to the country for the summer you will be more than satisfied with the work of the South Shore Laundry Limited. Something particularly interesting which adds to the life of your clothing is the marvelous system of water softening which is used there. Water is made so soft that very little soap is needed to clean the clothes and as we all know the less soap used the longer the clothes will endure. Dainty linens, socks etc. are given particular attention. Phone the South Shore Laundry today.

Neighborhood House and the Jewish Child

Jewish Montreal boasts of a social settlement known as Neighborhood House. This Organization is doing splendid work in one of Montreal's most thickly populated districts and its officers and directors deserve much praise for their efforts. However, when one reviews the many activities of the institution in the cause of childhood —he is impressed with the fact that the "Jewish Element" is non-existent. Neighborhood House shelters classes in sewing, handicraft, dancing and painting—but no classes pertaining to Jewish culture and Jewish thought. Why not have classes in Jewish dramatics—Jewish music? And why not organize groups for the study of Jewish history? The argument advanced often is, that Neighborhood House is non-sectarian. But does non-sectarianism exclude Judaism? Does a Catholic institution that is non-sectarian exclude Catholicism? Some of the Jewish children in that thickly populated quarter, where is located Neighborhood House—may go to Cheder. There in the Hebrew School, they may get a smattering of Hebrew. But certainly they do not get in the Chedorim the ethical, spiritual and historical training in the Vernacular. Such a training is most important for the Jewish child who is growing up into the Canadian Jew of tomorrow. And after all, what right has any Jewish organization to ask for support from Jewish Federation, unless that institution be definitely and directly identified with the Jewish interpretation of life. Even social service has a Jewish interpretation—a Jewish point of view. Such a view is precious to the conscious and thinking Jew. And the Jewish child attending a Neighborhood House supported by Jews has a right to expect something of Jewishness in such an institution. And generally speaking is it not about time that we Judaize many of our institutions supported by Jews?

The Orthodox Rabbis in Convention assembled denounced what they term "Left-wing Jews". Rabbi Rosenberg phrased the denunciation as follows: "The Conservatives are worse than the Reformers. We know where the Reformers stand. These do not masquerade—they do not conceal their position as to their interpretation of Jewish life. And the frankness of the Reformers is praiseworthy. But the Conservatists hold peculiar opinions. They want to be Orthodox and Reform at the same time. Such a status is impossible. They have confused Jewish life. We must guard against the "Left-wing Jews". Now, I am not in sympathy with the basic principles of Conservative Judaism. But there is something in what the Agudath Harabonim has to say. The United Synagogue has not has not developed a definite program. It seems to be a "Left-wing" party. The Union of American Hebrew Congregations. What the Union of Reform did yesterday—the members of the United Synagogue are instigating today. Personally, I am looking forward to a Union of Reform and Conservative Judaism. Both Organizations represent Judaism in one form or another. And there will be a merging of the two, when the next generation of American Jews take hold of things. But for the present where the leaders in American Jewish life are all products of European Countries—Conservative Judaism is a necessity. It may not be logical, but it is psychological. However, to the keen observer—he sees it is marching forward. Look about and see the progress of Reformation that is going on in the Orthodox Shules and in the Conservative Temples.

It is all a matter of time. Let us not denounce each other. The Conservative Jews will become Reform Jews. And the Orthodox will in turn become the "Conservative" people. Such is the law of Heraclitus—"change"—Reform and Reformulations. Life demands it.

What is the Jewish Graduate?

This is the graduation season. Hundreds of Jewish young men and women will be receiving honors and diplomas during the next weeks. And we are glad. But the question does arise how many of those receiving the same of academic education will give of themselves to the cause of Israel? Is it not true generally speaking that many Jewish young men entering professions and other callings lose contact with Israel and the Synagogue. Perhaps the responsibility of earning a livelihood gives no opportunity for the social life. However, Israel needs its academic men to lead. Those who are not selfish will give of themselves to the cause of the Jew.

A Word About Prayer

This is an age in which the question mark is placed at the end of every human experience. Especially is there doubt placed upon religious institutions, habits and beliefs. And daily we ask ourselves—why pray?

And our answer is a simple one. We pray because we can't do otherwise but pray. Prayer is native to the human soul, even as breathing and eating. Man is a praying animal. Sometimes we neglect prayer and a crisis is necessary to turn our hearts to a "Power not ourselves". Sometimes a great responsibility will cause us to pray. But the normal human prays even as Daniel who turned thrice daily to Jerusalem. For prayer is latent in every life. What is prayer? It is the language between man and God. And even as speech between man and man has undergone evolution, so has prayer. The English word "prayer" refers to begging. The Hebrew "Tephilo" expresses best what we mean by prayer today. "Tephilo" means "humbling". Man in prayer humbles himself before the Infinite and declares his limitations in the presence of the Wonder of Life. Baffled by the mystery and majesty of the Universe about him, he acknowledges his littleness in the presence of the Creator. He communes with the cause of this wonder of life, and expresses thanksgiving that he too is a part of that great wonder.

We do not hold to that view of prayer which conceives of a God in the heavens who needs to be flattered, lauded in order to secure favor from Him. Nor do we hold to that view of prayer that turns God into a miracle worker, who changes the laws of nature because of man's begging. Rather do we pray not so much to influence God but ourselves. Every sincere and genuine prayer lifts man up to God. Prayer gives our spirit in unison with the "All Spirit" from whom we draw inspiration in character. All of us have great spiritual and divine reservoirs within us. Through prayer we tap these spiritual reservoirs—and these give us courage and strength and through these we grow in spirit and character. The great of history have all been men of prayer. Alas, our age is an era of impatience. We do not cultivate prayer. Even as friendship and art need to be cultivated so the art of praying. The rationalist will doubt and question the effect of prayer on the individual. To the analyst, prayer may seem a harmless deception. But the human heart that has experienced prayer—it alone knows the comfort and inspiration and benefit of communion with the Divine. The man of prayer has the power to defy fate and conquer obstacles. He can truly say—"The Lord is my light and my salvation, whom shall I fear?"

St. Catharines, Ont.

St. Catharines Chapter of Hadassah held an entertainment Sunday evening, May 12th at the Club Rooms of the Synagogue. It is a good idea to get one's coal in before the start of the growing season before the grass, flowers and shrubs commence showing life.
Remember that the shrubbery, planted to hide the coal chute perhaps, will not be in bud. Later these shrubs will not only hide the entrance to the coal bin but will make access impossible without some damage to the plants. And regardless of the care exercised.
While modern piping shoots offer little resistance to heavy delivery equipment not immediately adjacent to the coal bin may be, can be, and is protected by the delivery-men of reliable firms. Therefore, know your dealer dealer who knows his drivers.

The Rise of David Levinsky

A Novel by Abraham Cahan

By arrangement with HARPER and BROTHERS, Copyright.

He made a pet of me. I became the monitor of his class (that is, I would bring in and distribute the books), and he often had me escort him home, so as to talk to me as we walked. He was extremely companionable and loquacious. He had a passion for sharing with others whatever knowledge he had, or simply for hearing himself speak. Upon reaching the house in which he lived we would pause in front of the building for an hour or even more. Or else we would start on a ramble, usually through Grand Street to East River and back again through East Broadway. His favorite topics during these walks were civics, American history, and his own history.

"Diligence, perseverance, tenacity," he would drawl out, with nasal dignity. "Get these three words engraved on your mind, Levinsky. Diligence, perseverance, tenacity."

And by way of illustration he would enlarge on how he had fought his way through City College, how he had won some prizes and beaten a rival in a race for the presidency of a literary society, how he had obtained his present two occupations—as custom-house clerk during the day and as school teacher in the winter evenings—and how he was going to work himself up to something far more dignified and lucrative. He unbosomed himself to me of all his plans; he confided some of his intimate secrets in me, often dwelling on "my young wife," who was a first cousin of his and to whom he had practically been engaged since boyhood.

All this, his boasts not excepted, were of incalculable profit to me. It introduced me to detail after detail of American life. It accelerated the process of "getting me out of my greenhornhood" in the better sense of the phrase.

Bender was an ardent patriot. He was sincerely proud of his country. He was firmly convinced that it was superior to any other country, absolutely in every respect. One evening, in the course of one of those rambles of ours, he took up the subject of political parties with me. He explained the respective principles of the Republicans and the Democrats. Being a Democrat himself, he eulogized his own organization and assailed its rival, but he did it strictly along the lines of principle and policy.

"The principles of a party are its soul," he thundered, probably borrowing the phrase from some newspaper. And he proceeded to show that the Democratic soul was of superior quality.

He went into the question of State rights, of personal liberty, of "Jeffersonian ideals." It was all an abstract formula and I was so overwhelmed by the image of a great organization fighting for lofty ideals that the concrete question of political baby-kissing, of Cuff-Button Leary's power, and of the scenes I had witnessed on Election Day escaped me at the moment. I merely felt that all I had heard about politics and political parties from Argentine Rachael and from other people was the product of untutored brains that looked at things from the special viewpoint of the gutter.

Presently, however, the screaming discrepancy between Cuff-Button Leary's rule and "Jeffersonian ideals" did occur to me. I conveyed my thoughts to Bender as well as I could.

He flared up. "Nonsense," he said. "Mr. Leary is the best man in the city. He is a friend of mine and I am proud of it. Ask him for any favor and he will do it for you if he has to get out of bed in the middle of the night. He spends a fortune on the poor. He has the biggest heart of any man in all New York. I don't care who he is. He helps a lot of people out of trouble, but he can't help everybody, can he? That's why you hear so many bad things about him. He has a lot of enemies. But I love him just for the enemies he has made."

"People say he collects bribes from disreputable women," I ventured to add.

"It's a lie. It's all nonsense," he shouted hotly.

"On Election Day I saw a man who was paying fifty whisper to him."

"Whisper to him. Whisper to him," Bender raved. "Well, what if he did whisper to him? Maybe that's the way he likes it. I suppose that's the kind of politics you were about the burying of votes, too. I am afraid you don't quite understand what you are, Levinsky."

His answers were far from convincing. I was wondering what interest he had to defend Leary, to deny things that everybody saw. But he dominated me by the force of his conviction.

Bender himself was a great hero-worshiper. In my peculiar American way, he was very religious, and I knew that his piety was not a mere affectation. Which was another puzzle to me, for all the educated Jews of my native town were known to be atheists. He belonged to a Reformed synagogue, where he conducted a Bible class.

One evening he expatiated on the beauty of the English translation of the Old Testament. He told me it was the best English to be found in all literature.

"Study the Bible, Levinsky. Read it and read it again."

The suggestion took my fancy. For I could read the English Bible with the aid of the original Hebrew. I began with Psalm 104, the poem that had thrilled me when I was on board. I read the English version first before Bender until I pronounced the words correctly. I thought I recognized their music. I got the chapter by heart. When I recited it before him he was joyously surprised and called me a "corker."

"What is a corker?" I asked beamingly.

"It's slang for 'a great fellow.'" With which he burst into a lecture on slang.

I often sat up till the small hours studying the English Bible. I had many a quarrel with Mrs. Levinsky over the kerosene I consumed. Finally it was arranged that I should pay her five cents for every night I sat up late. But this merely changed the bone of contention between us. Instead of quarreling over kerosene, we would quarrel over hours over the question whether I really had sat up late or not.

To this day, whenever I happen to utter certain Biblical words or names in their English version they seem to smell of Mrs. Levinsky's soap.

CHAPTER V

Evening school closed in January. The final session was of a festive character. Bender, excited and sentimental, distributed some presents.

"Promise me that you will read this glorious book from beginning to end, Levinsky," he said solemnly as he handed me a new volume of Boys and Sons and a small dictionary. "We may never meet again. But you will have something to remind you of once upon a time you had a friend whose name was Bender and who tried to do his duty."

I wanted to thank him, to say something handsome, but partly because I was overcome by his gift, partly because I was at a loss for words I merely kept saying, foolishly, "Thank you, thank you, thank you, thank you."

That volume of Dickens proved to be the ruin of my push-cart business and caused me some weeks of the blackest misery I had ever experienced.

As I started to read the voluminous book I found it an extremely difficult task. It seemed as though it was written in a language other than the one I had been studying for the past few months. I had to refer to the dictionary for the meaning of every third word, if not more often, while in many cases several words

...procession were Greek to me. Some words could not be found in my little dictionary at all, and in the case of many others the English definitions were as much of an enigma to me as the words they were supposed to interpret. Yet I was making headway. I had to turn to the dictionary less and less often.

It was the first novel I had ever read. The dramatic interest of the narrative, coupled with the poetry and the humor with which it is so richly spiced, was a revelation to me. I had had no idea that Gentiles were capable of anything so wonderful in the line of book-writing. To all of which would be added my self-congratulations upon being able to read English of this sort, a state of mind which I was too apt to mistake for my raptures over Dickens. It seemed to me that people who were born to speak this language were of a superior race.

I was literally intoxicated, and, drunkard-like, I would delay going to business from hour to hour. The upshot was that I became so badly involved in debt that I dared not appear with my push-cart for fear of arrest from my creditors. Moreover, I scarcely had anything to sell. Finally I disposed of what little stock I still possessed for one-fourth of its value, and to my relief as well as to my despair, my activities as a peddler came to an end.

I went on reading, or, rather, studying, Dombey and Son with voluptuous abandon till I found myself literally penniless.

I procured a job with a man who sold dill pickles to Jewish grocers. From his description of my duties—chiefly as his bookkeeper—I expected that they would leave me plenty of leisure, between whiles, to read my Dickens. I was mistaken. My first attempt to open the book during business hours, which extended from 8 in the morning to bedtime, was suppressed. My employer, who had the complexion of a dill pickle, by the way, proved to be a severe taskmaster, shamefully exacting, and so niggardly that I dared not take a decent looking pickle for my lunch.

I left him at the end of the second week, obtaining employment in a prosperous fish store next door. My new "boss" was a kinder and pleasanter man, but then the melodious and clamorous chaos of his place literally sickened me.

I left the fishmonger and pumped my board at Mrs. Levinsky's to go to a New Jersey farm where I was engaged to read Yiddish novels to the illiterate wife of a New York merchant, but my client was soon driven from the place by the New Jersey mosquitoes and I returned to New York with two dollars in my pocket. I worked as assistant in a Hebrew school where the American-born boys mocked my English and challenged me to make an "American fight" with them. On the third day I administered a sound un-American thrashing to one of them and lost my job.

Maximum Max got me employment of one of the dance halls in which he did his instalment business and let me sleep in his basement in return for some odd jobs. While there I earned from two to three dollars a week in tips and a good supper every night. There was a wedding in the place which happened two or three times a week. I had plenty of time for Dickens. I was still borrowing and was devouring Dombey and Son while the halls of the hall—wedding breakfasts, banquets, meetings—were quite empty. I felt happy, but the hungry dancers did not seem to. I was soon dismissed.

This is the way it came about. It was in the large ballroom of the establishment in question that I saw a modern dance for the first time in my life. It produced a new thrill on me. Here were eight comparatively young women who would be there one night, on her pretty shoulder and then go upstairs and dance with him with a frank relish of the situation in which they were placed. As I watch one of these girls I seemed to see the expression [illegible] of her working hours. I knew that the dance-hall customers were considered highly profane by the boss and he struck me as a model professor of respectful social intercourse. Almost jealous for her sake of the moment I was in love with her as this young woman went through her paces her face bore a faint smile of embarrassed satisfaction. I knew that she was a new comer. Another woman danced with great skill, and I knew that it was the pleasure of her life.

To watch dancing couples became a passion with me. One evening as I stood watching the waltzing members of a wedding party a member [illegible] of the bride's relatives [illegible] me if I [illegible] liked.

"What are you doing here?" she said. "You're a kike."

MAY 31ST.

Disaster at Mantua, 1776. An inevitable consequence of the enclosure of the Jews in Ghettos, without any opportunity of expansion, was that storey after storey had to be added to the houses in order to accommodate the growing population. These architectural accretions were more noteworthy for their audacity than for their solidity, and it frequently happened that a house would give way under some unusual strain. The most tragic instance of this occurred in Mantua on Friday, when two marriages were being celebrated together in one house. The unusual concourse of people proved too great for the ramshackle building to bear. The floor of the room fell through and the assembled company were precipitated into the cellar, with terrible results. Twenty-eight women (including one of the two brides) and thirty-seven men—sixty-five persons in all—met their deaths, while another sixteen or seventeen were severely injured. The sanctity of the Sabbath had to be desecrated in order to rescue the bodies, which were conveyed to the cemetery on six wagons. The anniversary of that day, the thirteenth of Sivan, was long observed by the community of Mantua as a solemn fast in commemoration of the victims. Too late, the Government ordered an enquiry into the stability of all the houses in the city. These innocent victims must be numbered among the martyrs of the iniquitous Ghetto system.

JUNE 1ST.

Privilegium Fredericianum in Austria, 1244. Frederic II, 'the Quarrelsome', the last Babenberg Duke, belied his nickname in his relations with the Jews of his country. His famous Jewish charter, while it stringently regulated usury and similar activities, guaranteed at the same time a number of privileges. The Jews were to have freedom of movement within the Austrian territories; their merchandise was to be subject to the same tolls as that of Christian merchants; no tax was to be paid for the privilege of removing a corpse for burial from one city to another. Jewish Synagogues and cemeteries were guaran-

WHAT THE CHILDREN SAY

Subscribers of the CANADIAN JEWISH REVIEW are invited to send in little stories about their youngsters or children they know, what they say and do in interesting situations. Write down what your little one said to-day and mail it to the What-the-Children-Say Editor, REVIEW office, in Toronto or Montreal. Give the child's full name, age, address and the name of his parents. One dollar will be paid for every story printed.

Diana Morantz, age three years, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. S. Morantz, 2057 West 29 Street, Los Angeles, and granddaughter of Jacob Tannenbaum, of Los Angeles, formerly of Montreal, calls her grandfather "Papa". One cool morning he found her playing outside in a sleeveless summer dress. Thinking the child's dress not warm enough he said to her, "Diana, go ask your mother to put a warm dress on you". Diana went to her dress chest and picked another sleeveless voile dress which she took to her mother and said; "Mamma, put this dress by the heater, 'cause Papa says I should put on a warm dress."

to freedom from interference; Jewish children were protected from kidnapping or molestation; and Jewish courts were given cognisance in internal disputes. This measure served as model for similar subsequent charters in Bohemia, Moravia, Hungary, Silesia, and Poland.

June 2ND.

Martyrdom at Breslau, 1453. The visit to Silesia of John of Capistrano, the fanatical Franciscan friar who embodied the reaction against the Hussites, proved the occasion (as elsewhere on his path, from Sicily northwards) for an outbreak against the Jews. The report was spread that one of the wealthiest of them, to whom many of the local magnates were indebted, had purchased a Host from a peasant, and had distributed its fragments amongst the neighbouring congregations for ritual maltreatment. Forthwith the whole of the community was seized, and their property confiscated; the flight of one or two individuals being taken as proof of the guilt of the rest. One of the inevitable apostates now came forward with an accusation of ritual murder; and the bones of the victim were alleged to have been found, although hitherto his absence had not been noticed. On this charge further arrests were made throughout the province. Capistrano, by virtue of his inquisitorial powers, took over direction of the proceedings, extorting a confession of whatever he pleased by the relentless application of torture. In consequence, forty-one martyrs were burned to death before his lodgings in the Salzring. The rest were stripped of their goods and banished, all their children under seven years of age having previously been taken away by force to be brought up in the Christian faith. The example was fatefully followed in the rest of the province.

JUNE 3RD.

Bull Sedes Apostolica, 1423. Pope Martin V, the nominee of the Council of Constance, had begun his pontificate as a patron and protector of the Jews, as was shown especially in his benevolent Bull of February 23rd., 1421. The progress of the Hussite schism in Bohemia put the Papacy, however, on the defensive; and this was speedily reflected in its policy towards the Jews. As his career progressed, accordingly, Martin became less favourably inclined, asserting that his previous privileges had been obtained by fraud. The Bull of June 3rd., 1423, which renewed the obligation of the Jews to wear their badges of shame, was among the first expressions of this change of policy.

JUNE 4TH.

Petition of Jurats of Bordeaux on behalf of the Jews, 1615. Large numbers of Marranos, fleeing from the fires of the Inquisition, had established themselves in the city from the close of the fifteenth century onwards, and, though they continued to be regarded officially as "nouveaux chretiens", and to conform outwardly to the dominant faith, it was an open secret that they were privately devout adherents to the religion of their fathers. The settlement was not accordingly eyed very confidently by the central government, which on more than one occasion threatened it with expulsion. The local authorities appreciated to the full the great utility of these immigrants and the advantage which accrued to local commerce through their activities. Accordingly, in a petition of June 4th., 1625, the Jurats spoke in the highest terms of the services which the New Christians rendered to their city, and begged that they should not be deprived of their presence.

JUNE 5TH.

'Haidamack' massacre at Uman, 1768. The 'Haidamacks' were bands of 'orthodox' brigands, discontented with their Polish masters, largely composed of runaway serfs captained by Cossacks, who terrorised the Ukraine in the eighteenth century. As at the period of Chmielnicki one hundred years before, their hatred of the Jews was even greater than that which they bore to the Poles: and it was their practice to hang a Jew, a Pole, and a dog together on one tree, with a contemptuous inscription at their feet. Thousands of refugees fled to the fortress of Uman: and here there occurred one of the most tragic episodes in the whole history of Jewish martyrdom. When the enemy, the Cossack garrison, joined them, the Poles were lulled into security by an assurance that the Jews only were in danger. Thus the city was entered almost without resistance, and a terrible massacre began. When the streets were filled with corpses that it became difficult to pass, they were collected in heaps and thrown to the dogs outside the gates. Large numbers fled

At last, in Toledo, [illegible] incredible fury. The Jews' quarter was [illegible] and its inhabitants butchered without mercy. Every Friday

It was recorded in the REVIEW recently that a certain Jewish politician in Canada addressed an audience of children on the subject of general behaviour. It is to be hoped that all of the youngsters fidgeted or looked out of the window or misbehaved generally and failed to hear any of the lecture delivered from the height of perfection to the helpless—young. Furthermore, this column wants to go down to posterity as objecting strenuously to organizations of parents giving their children a treat by letting them hear preachments from any Tom, Dick or Harry on the subject of behaviour in lieu of the parents themselves setting the children a proper pattern for noble behaviour. Judging by what satisfies adult Jewish audiences under the category of lecture anything is good enough for them. But it is exploitation to offer this kind of trash to growing children. Preachments on morals and general behaviour are bad enough spoken from the mouths of people trained in the work of teaching children. They can be nothing short of insufferable junk when rattled off by people ignorant of the approach to the child mind. The assumption that drivel is fit for children is mortifying to the intelligent youngster who sees through the patronizing adult with keener perception than a blundering speaker out of touch with children could ever dream. The first requirement for the person who dares to address children should be that he know the methods of modern pedagogy and understand children. That would rule out most speakers and most politicians. The politicians should be saved up for the adults, anyway.

The Union of Orthodox Rabbis of the United States and Canada has held its convention and the result is a lot of resolutions with which to remedy what is called the situation. According to news reports it was stated openly at the convention that there has been considerable decline in income and position of the Orthodox rabbi due to loss of congregational adherents. Palliative measures proposed included the formation of a committee of seven members to meet bi-weekly during the year for the consideration of the state of the rabbinate. Also the rabbis are to encourage congregations to engage Orthodox rabbis; and a committee is to combat vigorously the Reform and Conservative elements in Jewry. The convention was urged to oppose the payment of fees in order to secure positions for rabbis. Speakers took the stand that they did not want "balabatim" interfering in the matter of "kashruth". They were opposed to cantors and reverends endorsing foods as kosher when this business should be solely within the province of the rabbi. And that's practically the gist of the convention except, oh, yes, the state of the rabbinate on the question of "kashruth" and Sabbath.

As far as this column knows, the wails rising from this Orthodox convention are the first public admissions of defeat and impending death sent up authoritatively from the Orthodox stronghold. For some reason or other even the very people who claim to be Orthodox in their observances while violating the Sabbath and compromising upon other things as important to their element, are the ones who dislike most to hear it said that Orthodoxy is dying and there is no hope for it. But its doom is plain to see. This has been said for years now by many outside and even some inside Orthodox ranks. Now it is being said by the Orthodox leaders themselves. They admit that conditions of the Orthodox rabbis in this country are worse than in Russia. But they expect to remedy the situation with resolutions and committees and attacks on the other elements and also, marvellous to say, with a young people's league!

In his presidential message to the convention Rabbi Israel Rosenberg said: "The entire structure of Judaism is shaken. None the less, Orthodox Jewry should not despair but rather renew its efforts to preserve its ancient faith, pure and undefiled." And here you have the sand in which Orthodoxy, like an ostrich, has stuck its head. If it keep its head there it will die, of course. If it takes this stubborn, naive head out and decides to make the ancient faith conform to the needs of the people of to-day, Orthodoxy will become Conservative or Reform or at least something other than it is at present. In a way this change would be a kind of death, too, for pure Orthodoxy. And when, in desperation, its leaders look about them for the material for a young people's league with which to renew life, they will find that the young people have fled or are fleeing. And so the Orthodox expectancy of death is naturally greater than that of life. The wall has long been blurred with hand-writing to the effect that the rabbis have failed to read it. Ha.

and not infrequently in some ex- wagon. I was constantly borrow- quarters, dimes, nickels.

Maximum Max was very kind to As I could not meet him at the where I dared not face my tors, I would waylay him in front residence.

"I tell you what, Levinsky," he said to me. "You ought to learn trade. It's plain you were not to be a business man. The black (meaning the words in books) up too much room in your head."

Finally I owed him so many quar- and even half-dollars, that I had the courage to ask him for more.

Hunger was a frequent experience I been no stranger to the streets at Antomir, at least after the of my mother; but, for some I was now less capable of it. The pangs I underwent at times so acute that I would up cigarette stubs in the street smoke them, without being a smok- for the purpose of having the pain deadened by dizziness and nausea. Sometimes, too, I would burn my hand with a match or bite it as hard as I could. Any kind of suffering or excitement was welcome, provided it made me forget my hunger.

When famished I would sometimes saunter through the streets on the lower East Side which disreputable creatures used as their market-place. It was mildly exciting to watch women hunt for men and men hunt for women; their furtive glances, winks, tacit understandings, bargainings, the little subterfuges by which they sought to veil their purpose from the other passers-by; the way a man would take stock of a passing woman to ascertain whether she was of the approachable class. The timidity of some of the men and the matter-of-fact ease of others, the mutual spying of two or three men aiming at the same quarry, the pretended abstraction of the policeman and a hundred and one other details of the traffic. Many a time I roamed in the chase without having a cent in my pocket, stop to discuss terms with a woman in front of some window display, or steal a stranger, only soon to turn away from her as the previous that I had expected to be taken to her residence while she postponed go

"Has anyone told you yet?"

Ask in any group of Toronto housewives about this laundry, and you will almost certainly find one or more who are on our regular list of satisfied customers. The "family wash" problem is so easily solved with our five different services from which to choose that it is a pleasant subject of conversation amongst women who believe in taking advantage of modern household aids, particularly when, as in this case, the work is really done better and more cheaply. If you are not familiar with our new ideas, phone and have a little chat with us about your own wash problem.

"NO, NO, NANETTE"

At one time, this remarkable musical comedy was being played concurrently in eighteen countries. More than 40,000 people were attending these performances daily throughout the world with an average daily gross receipts of $90,000. And the reason is simple enough. "No, No, Nanette" possesses everything that the theatregoer can ask for in the way of bright entertainment. The members of the Lyric Musical Comedy Co. you may rest assured, will give a splendid performance of "No, No, Nanette". The fact that it has a well defined plot adds to the charm of an entertainment you would enjoy if this was lacking.

This will be the first offering of the Summer Season at the Victoria Theatre starting Monday June 3rd.

their cause. They have been unfair. Jerome J. Lourenco is a fine Jewish gentleman. He gave nothing to Palestinian work, because he sincerely did not believe in it, and because he thought it would be bad Jewish policy to encourage it. With the nationalist phase of Palestinian work temporarily relegated to the background, he has been convinced that he should help the colonization in Palestine. He has done so, and done so, generously. I congratulate him. I wonder whether other Jews who believed as he, will follow his lead. Some more in Philadelphia. Will they in Toronto?

A SERVICE OF THANKSGIVING PRAYER FOR THE RECOVERY OF THE KING

June the seventeenth has been set aside as the British empire day on which the subjects of H. Majesty, King George V are to assemble in prayer for his recovery. Churches throughout the empire are arranging special services for that occasion. I urge that all synagogues in the dominions arrange for similar services. There also should arrange special Sunday services. [illegible] the preceding Sabbath. For Toronto the Holy Blossom is arranging a special Sunday morning service.
